To

THE EDITOR OF THE BOMBAY COURIER.

SIR,

I have heard with pleasure that it is the intention of the two distinguished individuals who preside over the Councils of Western India, to adopt some measures for the improvement, or preservation of that noble animal, with which, whether on the martial fields of Spain, or on the plains of the Dekun, some of the most important events of their public lives are minutely connected. It is however the Dekun, and not the Spanish Horse that is the object of my anxiety: and I shall be glad if the subjoined opinions find a place in your paper, as they may at least call forth others more worthy of notice.

It is generally known that a breed of horses superior to all within the Indus, except those of Kattywar and the Lecky Jungle, has been produced in the country intersected by the Beema, the Seena, the Nera and the Kistnah rivers; and generally over the whole of the high, rocky, and sandy tracts of the Dekun, south of the Godavery; and from Nandair on that river, S. W. to Darwar. I have consequently, since so large a portion of this country is our own, heard with surprise of the expedient of permanently supplying the Madras and Bombay Cavalry, with horses from the Arab and Persian stock; and even of a proposal to mount our Indian Cavalry on African horses.

Experience has proved to me that the horse of the Dekun is calculated to undergo services of privation and fatigue, in a degree little, if at all, inferior to the Arab; yet I am not prepared to say that he is equal to the weight of our troopers, with their arms and accoutrements, in the hard drill and discipline of a cavalry regiment.

The good Beemraterry and Maundesh horse has much the appearance of the Arab. His figure is often equally good; his height much the same; he is round, compact and sinuous. His head bears a still stronger resemblance: the the full and prominent eye; the same width of fore head and clearness of gullet; the depth of jaw-bone and tapering muzzle; with the expanded and fiery nostril. He has docility and temper sufficient for all the purposes of cavalry; and is capable of a much higher manage than the Arab. His inferiority appears to consist in less durable bone and sinew; although neither to the hand nor the eye, is there any indication of this. In short, some of our knowing ones, who have not been to the Beema, as well as at Higg's and Dady's, might be bit.

There is a prevailing opinion among us, that this horse, so much the model of the Arab, was produced by crossing the breed of the country with some Arab horses, taken by the Mahrattas from the Mahometan conquerors of Bejapoor, or perhaps by the Mahometans themselves. This is a plausible story, but whether true or otherwise would now be difficult to determine. Suppose we rather adopt the opinion that the country which produces this horse is neither very different in soil nor climate from Arabia: and that a dry climate, with a sandy or stony surface, is peculiarly favorable to the production of strong and hardy horses, when, in their younger years, they are not bred to the luxuries of the stable. As a proof of this, all the attempts made by natives to introduce this much esteemed breed into the black cotton soil of the rich valley of Berar, have failed.

With such a tract of country as we now possess, admirably calculated from the cheapness of its produce, and stocked with mares sufficient, in a few years, to supply the whole of our cavalry, it is surely impolitic to draw our remount horses from a foreign land.

Two reasons lead to this conclusion.

1st. The Channel from which we are supplied may, from various causes, fail us.

2ndly. We give to foreigners annually, a large sum of our money. It must require an expenditure of five lac of Rupees to renew the seven thousand horses required for the Artillery and Cavalry of the Madras and Bombay armies alone. This would be a fine yearly return to the people of the Dekun, from whom our policy necessarily leads us to take much, and give little.

It does not appear that there would be much difficulty or expence in adopting such measures as would ensure a regular supply of Dekun horses, fitted at least, for our native cavalry. I am aware that the plan adopted by the Madras Government was considered to fail, not from any want of attention to the Pareinda stud, but because sufficient time was not given for a fair trial.

Digitized with financial assistance from the Government of Maharashtra
on 08 April, 2017

It has, I believe, generally been found that the first cross between a sire and dam of a different country, disappoints the expectation of the experimentalist; the produce being very often inferior to either; and that it is not until the second or third remove that the improvement appears. On this head sufficient experience has been obtained at the Pursa stud, of which advantage ought to be taken. A number of stallions proportioned to the extent of the breeding Districts in the Dekun, could be obtained from that stud, and the opinion of the superintending officer would regulate the selection. I would judge that they ought not to be under the second or third remove; and the English, as giving superior size, ought to be preferred to the Arab stock, in crossing with the Dekun mares.

On a moderate computation there would be found from six to eight thousand mares, scattered over the different towns and villages in the abovementioned tract, applicable to the purposes of breeding. There would be no reluctance on the part of the inhabitants so to apply their mares; nor would it now be necessary to bind them to any terms in the disposal of the produce; on the contrary it would perhaps be necessary to hold out an assurance of a remuneration for such as were fitted for the service.

The Stallions ought to be distributed over the best breeding districts, and might be placed in charge of the collectors, or other local officers of Government, without any expence attending the establishment beyond the keep of the stallions*.

To conclude—a few more years neglect will render any future measure of this nature impracticable. There has not, in the last three years, been any apparent advantage to the owners in preserving the valuable brood-mares of the Dekun. The period of their lives will hardly exceed fifteen or eighteen years; and ten or twelve would be that of their foal-bearing.

I omit all consideration of that policy which would have extinguished the breed of horses in India as one way of getting rid of the Pindaries.

A SILLADAR OF THE GOOD OLD TIME.

* At all events allowing a certain expence did attended the superintendence of the improvement which I contemplate, it would not be greater than that which we now maintain in the Gulf and at Bombay.

BOMBAY.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 5, 1822.

On the evening of new year's day the Honorable the Governor gave a ball and supper at Pareil, which was most numerously attended. There were present nearly all the European Ladies and Gentlemen, and principal native Gentlemen and Merchants belonging to the Presidency, together with every stranger of distinction and respectability. Amongst the latter we observed Their Excellencies the Conde de Rio Pardo, late Governor General of the Portuguese dominions in India; Meerza Baqur, the envoy from Shirauz; Meerza Khoosroo Beg, the envoy from Scind; Hajee Ibraheem, the envoy from Béla; the Jaffurabad chieftain, and Bhow Mahraj, the Kolapoor Raja's Minister; together with Abdul Ruheem Khan, son of the late Mahomed Nubee Khan of Shirauz; Hajee Saleh Khan, son of the late Mahomed Allee Khan Shoostry; Mulhar Raó Mankeswar, nephew of the late Sudasew Punt Bhow, the late Paishwa's prime minister; Dinkur Ram Gocklay, and Bhaskur Ram Gocklay, brother of the late Visajee Punt Gocklay, and relations of the late Bappoo Gocklay.

The company began to assemble soon after nine in the upper suite of apartments at Pareil; which since the improvements of the building were completed, have been fitted up in a manner in which elegance and taste are most happily combined with a splendour and magnificence suited to the residence of the head of so important a government. Dancing commenced about ten and continued till near midnight, when the company repaired to a suite of tents or canopies erected on a terrace at the bottom of the garden, whence they viewed a very splendid exhibition of pyrotechnical skill. The effect of which amongst the romantic scenery, heightened by the stillness and obscurity of the night, was most beautiful and picturesque.

The sense of seeing having been amply gratified by this magnificent spectacle, a screen on the left of the canopy was removed, and presented an arrangement of supper tables covered with a profusion of cold meats, delicacies and wines, on which were covers for upwards of 300 persons. After supper the party returned to the ball room, where its amusements were resumed and kept up with spirit to a late hour.

Letters from Calcutta, mentioning the arrival of H. E the naval Commander in chief, state that the Admiral expected H. M. frigate Liverpool would arrive in Bombay about the 1st of this month, on which day also H. E. purposed to sail from Calcutta on his way to Madras and ultimately to this port, in which he expects to arrive about the 10th or 15th February. The Glasgow frigate was to leave England after the coronation on the 19th July, and her arrival was daily expected.

A letter from Tabriz dated the 10th or 16th Sept. says "We have this morning received papers from Tiflis announcing the death of Bonaparte, * * ——— likewise that Lord Exmouth had taken possession of Alexandria with a large British force—We had papers about 20 days ago mentioning that 14,000 troops had arrived at Malta, but it was not known for what purpose * * this likewise accounts for our not having received any direct intelligence from Constantinople for so many months."

If the above intelligence be true the writer must have made a mistake in the date of his letter by a month at the least. Lord Exmouth was in England on the 6th July, living as a private country gentleman, and could not have taken Alexandria with a large force in time to allow of its being known at Tabriz on the 10th Sept. There are however good grounds for believing there is a mistake in the date of this letter. It refers to another letter written about a month previous and sent by a gentleman who left the city of Tabriz on the 2d of Sept. and did not quit the province till the 10th. A letter from the same writer dated 24th Sept. makes no mention of the affair of Alexandria, and the death of Bonaparte was not known at Bushire till the beginning of November. Admitting therefore that the date is erroneous, it is just possible that Lord Exmouth may have been dispatched in a fast sailing ship for a coup de main on Alexandria with such troops as could be spared from Malta and the Ionian islands. We are informed, however, that other letters from Tabriz dated late in October are silent on the subject of this intelligence.

By the late arrivals from China we learn that the unfortunate American who had been the cause of the death of a Chinese woman, had been executed by the Chinese government. We have been kindly favored with the following plain statement of the whole transaction, & as we place great reliance on its accuracy in all essential points, we give it without further comments.

"Sept. 23d A Chinese woman was killed alongside of the American ship Amelia (supposed) by one of the seamen of that ship, to whom she had been selling liquor, and under the idea that she was cheating him, he (it is said) threw the jar at her, which fractured her skull and caused immediate death. The body was exposed on the bank of the river, & after a deputation of Mandarines had held an investigation or inquiry over it, a demand immediately followed, that the man should be delivered up, to be tried by the Chinese law at Canton. The demand was stoutly refused by the Americans; who then declared that if the man was taken out of the ship by the Chinese government, the American flag would be struck and the ship abandoned, and it would become a national business. The ship after this fired a great gun every evening, & kept her colours always out, both night and day. A body of Americans tried the man and he was found not guilty; but notwithstanding this decision, they kept the poor man a constant prisoner, and in irons. On the 4th of Oct., by agreement, the principal Mandarine of the district, accompanied by the Heong merchants & linguists repaired on board the Amelia to investigate the business further: he refused, however, to receive evidence from any American or European, but after extorting what they said was the truth from a poor woman who unfortunately saw some part of the business, he concluded by making a peremptory demand, that the man should be delivered up to him. The Americans' answer was the same as before viz. that the ship would be abandoned. The Mandarine seemed greatly surprised at this; and it appeared that through the timidity of the linguists a proper understanding between the parties had not been effected, but the mandarine had been led to believe that it was a matter of course the man would have been given up. He at length got in a great passion, and ordered the Heong Merchant and linguist into his boat, both in chains! After this, the Americans visited daily fell off daily in their great professions of what they would do sooner than submit to the indelible disgrace that their character would suffer by delivering up one of their countrymen to the Chinese; and the poor man must have felt warned of what was to follow, when they left off firing the gun in the evening, and ceased to keep up their flag. In short, all their trade having been stopped by the Chinese, and having large funds in their hands, and no head to look to, every one began to feel the impulse of his own interest. So that they became much disunited, and it ended in their allowing the Chinese to proceed to the ship, and take away the poor fellow, under an assurance that no molestation should occur on the part of the Americans during the business; and this was effected to the perfect satisfaction of the Chinese, and they acknowledged even to their surprise.

The man was removed from the ship to Canton on the 24th October, after suffering worse than many deaths, from the horrid suspence during nearly a month that he was kept in close confinement on ship-board, and he had become a perfect skeleton when the Chinese got him. After the first day of his reaching Canton no American or European was allowed to see him, and the only anxiety manifested about his fate, was by Englishmen, & not by Americans, who latterly evinced the greatest apathy and unconcern in the business.

A body of English gentlemen made application to be admitted at the trial, which was peremptorily refused by the Mandarines. About the third day after his arrival in Canton, the final trial took place before the principal Mandarines, who were Chief Magistrates, or heads of police of different districts; it lasted about an hour and a half in a large house called the Consoo House quite near to the European factories. One gentleman, it is said, got behind the guards for a moment and saw the poor fellow before his judges upon his knees, and apparently under torture, but I could not ascertain who the gentleman was. It is certain, the man persisted in his innocence most strongly from first to last, but during that fatal hour and a half, the linguist afterwards said, that he acknowledged his being guilty; however, it seemed that the Mandarines kept their decision a secret, for all the Heong Merchants appeared in full hopes that the prisoner would be released in the morning, which hopes were most effectually realised, for at six o'clock A. M. he was crucified, or tortured to death by tightening the cords which fastened him to the cross, commencing at the extremities, then the body, and finally by that which bound the neck or throat. The Americans were informed that the body of their countryman was ready for interment, and that they might take it away, which [illegible] the horrid manner in which it had been distorted and cut by the cords during the time of strangulation, was so shocking, that the Americans said no one could look at it.

The man was much respected in the ship, and has left a widow and family in Boston: it was said that he not born in the United States."

At Poona on the afternoon of the 30th ultimo, John Adolphus Pope, Esq. late Sheriff of Bombay.

Mr. Pope left Bombay with his family about a fortnight ago on a visit to a friend at Poonah. He had spent Christmasday in great spirits and apparently in the enjoyment of good health. He had purposed setting off homewards on the 27th, but on the 26th he was suddenly attacked with the return of a complaint he had before been afflicted with, the violence of which baffled the skill and unremitting attention of his medical friends, and he continued to suffer greatly until about 3 o'clock on Sunday afternoon, when he expired.

Our acquaintance with Mr. Pope has not been of sufficient standing to enable us to do full justice to his memory. He was sincere and unaffected in the regular performance of his religious duties, Warm hearted, hospitable and friendly, Honorable and upright in all his commercial dealings. An indulgent master. A kind, affectionate and tender husband.

Mr. Pope was Mayor at the time of the lamented death of Sir A. Anstruther, and performed the arduous duties of President of the Recorder's Court for many months with unwearied zeal and attention.

Mr. Pope was Editor of the Bombay Gazette, and we deplore the loss of a man on whom we have lived on the most intimate friendly terms, whose private virtues we highly esteemed, and whose friendship we greatly valued. Ed.

The Janet Hutton experienced a severe typhoon, on the 18th and 19th of October, during her passage through the China Seas, but was able to weather it without being subjected to disastrous consequences.

The following is a list of the vessels, that have been detained for some time past by the quadron under Lord Cochrane, for having Spanish property or arms on board; viz.

British brig Rebecca, Captain Thomson, Depeyster owner) loaded with spirits and ues from Pisco to Callao. Condemned the o; brig liberated.

The Hero of Malown was still nearer in, and would have been wrecked had she not fortunately been able to get shelter in Nhiatrang Bay, where she was landlocked and brought up with two anchors, after most of her sails had been blown from the yards. Had she made the land to the Northward or Southward of the place on which she was actually driven, or had it remained dark for another hour, the consequences would have in all likelihood been most melancholy.

The Duke of Bedford kept company with the Lady Barlow from Macao to Sincapore. In the typhoon she had four or five feet water in her hold with both pumps going—her sails were blown away and she was otherwise considerably damaged. Had the gale continued a few hours longer, it was the of those on board that she must have down. A great part of t been damaged as she pa many days afterwords.

The Nerbuddah suffered typhoon on her passage bac the sea breaking over her so frequently, that it and impracticable to open the batches purpose of throwing some cargo overorder to ease her. She left Malacca a before the Lady Barlow reached it, to call at Penang on her way to Bombay.

On Tuesday afternoon, at High Water, Messers. James Scott and Co., launched from their Building Establishment at Fort Gloucester, a very beautiful new Brig, of the largest size, constructed under the Superintendents of Mr. Davis. His Excellency the Naval Commander in Chief accompanied by Captain Corry and other Naval Officers, honored the Launch with their presence, and His Excellency named the Brig "The Nimrod," By way of experiment, she was launched with all her Masts, Yards, and Rigging aloft, in a fit state to proceed immediately to Sea, and with the greater part of her Cargo on board; a trial that excited more than a common degree of interest, and occasioned her majestic movement and safe reception into her new Element to be hailed with repeated Cheers His Excellency and the Naval Gentlemen present bestowed many encomiums upon the beauty of her model when afloat, which appears to be that of a fine Corvette, though she is constructed to hold a Cargo quite equal to her Tonnage. His Excellency and a party of Friends dined and spent the Evening at Fort Gloucester.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.
JUNE 21ST 1821.

AFFAIRS OF SICILY.

Lord William Bentinck rose to bring forward the motion of which he had given notice respecting the affairs of Sicily. In presenting himself for the first time to the notice of the house after being so many years a member, he trusted they would readily believe him, when he declared the extreme diffidence and reluctance he felt on the present occasion, and how happy he should have been to resign the important cause, of which he was now the feeble advocate, into abler (and indeed any would have been abler) hands. He might have easily found more competent persons to have brought forward this question: he knew that he could have imparted to many members all the circumstances of the case, and have put them in possession of all the information which he had upon the subject; but he was not equally aware that he could transfer to them, even humble as it was, that weight and authority which, from particular circumstances, he must be supposed to have acquired in the history of these transactions (Hear, hear.) Still more impossible would it have been for him, to transmit to, or infuse into, a stranger, that cordial attachment and affection towards a people, which he cherished in his own bosom (hear, hear,) for the real co-operation they had afforded him, and the benefits which had been reaped from their conduct. He who had an opportunity of seeing the opening and progressive improvement of Sicily, and had subsequently had the mortification of seeing all the hopes he had fondly cherished disappointed; all the best rights and privileges of the people taken away; their prospects blasted, and themselves, after the promises held out to them, placed in a worse situation than even they were in before the British had them:—he who had seen all these under his own personal observat supposed to feel deeply upon t sion. (Hear, hear, hear.) Deeply he was of his own inability, he compromise his feelings, or refrain ing forward this question, howev might be of personal failure in He had therefore to make a larg the indulgence of the house (h hear) and he had one other favo fore he entered upon the subjec that the house would not let th pousel suffer from the feeblenes cate. (Hear.) He could have creating any unnecessary deb no personal vanity to gratify; as to complain, that liberty granted to a people lised—a promise in wh honour of the country due fulfilment of whic d by the people, though ree incousistent with the p ons of the parties concurri iance. The late manifest of the allie monarchs at Laybach declared nation not to countenance any form of const tution which was not legally est liberty required for the people of Sicily b been, he would contend, as le and upon authority as legitima that which bound the govern sovereigns themselves. In behalf of the Sicilians he word of honour that he did not step forward the instigation of any individual or party; he had received no solicitation whatever, nor had he had any communication with Sicily since he had left that country. (Hear.) When he quitted Sicily there were two conditions so solemnly stipulated for on the part of the people. One was, that no individual should be molested for his connexion with the English while they administered the affairs of the island; and the other, that the rights and privileges to which they were entitled should not be impaired by the transfer of their administration. How had these solemn stipulations been fulfilled? He had the best means for knowing that, so far from their having been fulfilled, there never was a more complete annihilation of all rights and privileges than that which followed; nor could one accompanied by greater injustice, oppression, and cruelty be found, he believed, to have stained the annals of any country in the world. (Hear hear.) If the house followed him in that view of the subject, what better time could occur for enforcing their sense of justice, than when the King of Naples was about (as he had promised) to put the constitution of the Sicilians upon a solid basis. (Hear, hear.) The grounds of the occupation of Sicily by the Br time, could only get from the Sicilian government one regiment of cavalry to assist in the defence of their country: and at length, when Murat's invasion actually took place, it was repelled by the valour of British troops, aided, not so much by the Sicilian government as by the voluntary efforts of some of the Sicilian people. [Hear, hear.] The first six years of the occupation of Sicily passed on in much the same spirit with the local government; and it was at length determined that a more efficient attempt should be made to place matters on a better footing. Communication was had with the noble marquis opposite [Londonderry], who then, as now, filled the office of Secretary for Foreign Affairs, with so much honour to himself and advantage to his country. (Hear.) Instructions were in consequence drawn up, in which the advantage that must be derived by the monarch from a cultivation of the affections of his subjects, and the beneficial results that must attend their support of the dignity of their sovereign, were strongly pointed out. These were the general outlines of this subject, and he might be permitted to add, that the termination of our connexion with Sicily was marked by the same spirit which had characterized its commence ment. These impressions on and the consequ measures were a was comple advisers were wi were placed in the King made ment. He said to a sort of fee mean to agree to it was feared th which had for would succeed i
